

Final Self Reflection

While being in this class I wasn't able to reach the goal of writing that I wanted but I was able to learn about my own writing and where I mostly struggled at. I was also able to learn about different types of writing and different types of strategies that would help me in the future. For example, some of the types of writing I learned more about were reflective and narrative writing and some of the strategies that I would use to improve more would be using outlines, giving myself questions to answers or getting feedback from my peers.

Out of all the assignments I've done in the class I have two favorite assignments I did which are the Literacy Narrative and story map assignment. The literacy narrative essay was one of my favorite assignments to do because I was able to tell others about my journey with reading and writing and who was my mentor when it came to school. Maybe my journey even taught others something new or motivated them to do better. The story map assignment was another one of my favorite assignments to do because I enjoyed putting images and other details to make my story more interesting. I feel as if it also helped people understand my story more.

What I found the most challenging in this class was having control of giving my own grade and Putting more detail into anything I wrote about. The reason why I feel like giving myself a grade is the most challenging thing in this class is because my work will not always be the best but I probably wouldn't see that and Personally I always need feedback on my work. I feel like it helps me out a lot that way. Putting detail into my work has always been a challenging thing for me, I always struggle on putting my words together and making it make sense and explaining things. I have improved throughout the years but I still haven't reached the level that I want. What could've made these challenges easier for me would be getting more help and practicing more on my writing.

What I learned about researching is that you have to have a good amount of evidence and detail to understand and make your writing good on anything you are researching about. You also have to be careful where to get your sources good because it's not always gonna be factual or good information. For Example, like wikipedia you're able to write anything on there and that's why it's known as not an accurate website. What I learned about myself as a writer is that I just write anything that comes to my mind even if it makes sense or if it doesn't. Another thing I Learned about myself as a writer is that I enjoy diary writing and narrative writing. I love to write about things like if I'm talking to someone in person or telling a story.
